In Italy, less is definitely not more. We're talking here not about weight or power – here, it's all about nuance and balance – but about grapes and, yes, confusion. Italy boasts over 550 officially recognized wine grapes. Even Italians get confused. There's a whole slew of similarly named green-, black-, red- and white-monickered varieties all over the country. You can see why: a grape has a bit of a green ("verde") tinge to it? Fine, let's call it Verdello. Or maybe Verduzzo. Or Verduchia, or Verdicchio, or Verdone, or Verdea. Wait a minute, this grape here has a slightly black ("nero") tinge: Okay, let's call it Nerello. That one over there; that will be a Nero. This smaller one looks like a Neretto to me; that other one, a Ner. But wait a minute: my Neretto is different to yours. So my grape is a Neretto di Bairo, yours is a Neretto di San Giorgio. And my Nerello is not yours, because it's from the plain of Mascali and lacks your foliage: so we'll call yours Nerello Cappuccio (from cappuccio, or "cowl", of leaves), and mine will be, logically enough, Nerello Mascalese...

And so it goes. The result is an array of wines of wildly diverse colours, aromas and flavours. Add blends, plus variations from myriad soils, exposures, altitudes, climates, clones and individual winemaking styles – and you realize Italy does exactly the same with wine as it does with its 500 olive cultivars, 400+ cheeses and 100+ (officially codified) pasta shapes. Variety is a way of life here. Be confused, by all means (and use the following pages to be less confused). And enjoy it.

Recent vintages

Amarone, Veneto & Friuli

- 2020 Veneto: balanced, gd quality, quantity. Friuli: rainy June, uneven, better for whites.
- 2019 Low quantity. Veneto: gd for Amarone, Soave. Friuli: fair quality.
- 2018 Optimal weather conditions. Gd for quantity, quality, esp fresh whites.
- 2017 V. difficult (non-stop rain); weedy Amarones a risk, green reds in general.
- 2016 V. hot summer; round but low-acid, big reds, chunky whites.
- 2015 Quantity gd, quality better; v.gd Friuli reds. Fresher than initially thought.
- 2014 Not memorable for Amarone, better Soave and Friuli whites, Valpolicellas v.gd.
- 2013 Gd whites. Reds, esp passito, suffered Oct/Nov rain/hail.
